A IMMENSE CROWD OF PEOPLE IN TRAFALGAR SQUARE.

London, Oct. 21.—In every part of the British man-of-war floats, the one hundredth anniversary of Nelson's victory over the combined fleets of France and Spain off Cape Trafalgar is being celebrated. On all the ships of the navy at a given hour flags were dipped, while the bands played the "Dead March." Nelson's old flagship, the Victory, still lying at Portsmouth harbor, was decked from stem to stern with bunting, and thousands of electric lights were strung everywhere for the night illumination of the old battleship. It was proposed to Illuminate the Nelson monument on Trafalgar Square here, but fearing the tremendous crush of people, with the accampanying accidents, the authorities would not sanction it. In London the day's celebration began with the hoisting of national flags on the Nelson column. Immense crowds assembled, and when Nelson's famous signal. CURATE AND THE CHINAMAN.

Only Religion Oriental Understood Was Very Human.

(Kansas City Journal.)

"I used to think when I was a student," said the curate, "that I felt the call to go east and convert the Celestials. My fad even then was comparative religion, and I got the idea that a people who developed Confucianism and Taoism were worth saving. That was the way I put it then. Naturally, as I passed a Chinaman in the street, or noticed a Chinese laundry, I wondered what the creed of the ordinary Chinaman, the poor coolie, might be. One day an inspiration struck me. of, and he'll be just as likely to know as any one would."

"There was a Chinese laundry just around the corner from my boarding house, so I resolved to take my collars there a few times and pave the way to an acquaintance. At first we exchanged only a few words about the weather and prices and dates of doneness. At last I thought we were on good enough terms, and I plunged into the great subject. First, I used my best English and tried a few general questions about religious convictions in China. The only answer I got was broad grins in Chinese. Then I fell into the queer idea that the more asinine my English the more nearly it approached Mongolian. When I tried a sort of pigeon dialect on him the laundryman looked foolish in reply, but stuck to looks or to the easy answer:

"No undlestan!"

"No undlestant".
"Then I thought my opening lay in the proper names. I knew, or thought I knew, the names of all the founders of Chinese sects. These, I argued, must be about the same in both languages, so with proper impressiveness I uttered selembly.

solemnly:

"Buddha!"

"The Chinman only stared.

"Then, pointing my finger straight at him, I went through them all. Buddha!"

'Confucius!" 'Menicus!" 'Lao-tse!"

Ah Sin began to look scared about this stage of the conversation. He kept a hot iron firmly grasped in his right hand and backed around the ironing board.

"Then I remembered, fool that I was that I was giving the names as adapted to European tongues by the Jesuit missionaries. I mentally rebuked myself, and tried again with the original Chinese monosyllables as I conceived them. I stood in front of the Chinaman and jerked out 'Kung-fu-tse!' 'Meng-tse!'

The Chinaman now evidently began to think of police protection. He looked anxiously at the door but when I ejaculated again 'Kung-fu,' he tapped his forehead and muttered:

General Strike Called on All the Railroads of Russia.

St. Petersburg, Oct. 21 .- The strike of railroad employes assumed a serious aspect today, when, with the three great trunk lines out of Moscow completely tied up and the other Moscow roads embarrassed, trains were stopped on the branch road from Nizh-ni Novgorod. The Pan-Russian union of railway employes have issued a call a general strike on all the railroads Russia. The extent to which the call will be obeyed remains to be seen as the union is of recent origin and its strength is an unknown quantity, but up to midnight no additional strikes have been reported. A meeting of St. Petersburg railway men was still in session at a late hour tonight and had not reached a decision to strike.

Demands Are Political.

The demands of the men are purely political, and therefore it is expected the strike will last only long enough to serve the purpose of a demonstra tion. The socialist leaders claim it is called only to test their strength and as a curtain raiser to a thorough and complete tie-up of the Russian rail-road systems in January as an object lesson to the government and douma, and that it will be called off as soon as it is seen that the strike machinery is working perfectly. The political nature of the movement is shown in the call of the national union for a general strike, which makes no mention economic demands, and declares the workmen are fighting for the ele-mentary human rights of freedom of speech and of the press and a represpeech and of the press and a representative government on the basis of universal suffrage, and that these are obtainable only by a strike.

"Brothers," the call says, "we have great power in our hands. The railroad employes throughout Russia share our views. The time has come to declare a general strike. Before our might the government must give way." might the government must give way.
